

The law on all forms of physical punishment of children in Scotland is changing.

From 7 November 2020, all physical punishment of children will be against the law in Scotland.

If you want to know more about this change in the law, please visit our website.

We've put together information about why this law has been introduced and what it will do. We've also published details about what we've done to prepare for this change in the law, and where support is available for those that want it.

This change in the law is about making things better for children in Scotland.

Physical punishment isn't in the best interests of children, and it can be harmful. It includes but isn't limited to smacking, slapping, skelping and pinching. We want Scotland to be the best place in the world for children to grow up, and this legal change will support that aim.

We know it can sometimes be difficult to cope with being a parent or carer.

That's why we've put together some advice and tips for keeping calm when things get challenging. You can find these, and other helpful hints, on our ParentClub website.

And remember, if you're a parent, you're not on your own.

We all find things challenging sometimes, but you don't need to go it alone - support is available. If you think speaking to someone might help, you can talk to Children 1st Parentline.
